TO PROVE ITS LATE ASSERTIONS

Concerning the City Finances Under the Present Administration-The Refunding Ordinance Against His Personal Interests but it is for the City's Welfare-Two Challenges that the Register will not Accept-Facts that Sustain the Intelli-

To the Editor of the Intelligencer,

SIR:-I am by inference charged by the Register of to-day with writing the editorial in Thursday's Intelligencer. which quoted figures showing that the Register had misrepresented the fucts when it said on Wednesday that the present administration had increased the outstanding orders to $50,000. I admit that I furnished the figures contained in that article, and now challenge the Register to disprove any of the statements contained therein. If it does not do so it will have to admit to the public that it misrepresented the facts in Wednesday's paper.

The figures contained in Thursday's Intelligencer were taken from the books The figures contained in Thursday's Intelligencer were taken from the books of the city clerks for the past four or five years, and can be verified by any person doubting their accuracy.

As far as the refunding ordinance is concerned, if I were to consult my rersonal interests, I would probably do as some of the stockholders of the Resister.

concerned, if I were to consult my_rer sonal interests, I would probably do as some of the stockholders of the Register are doing, ask my friends as a personal favor to vote against the ordnance, hoping by its defeat to see the taxes increased for next year, thereby benefitting myeelf personally. In 1895 I worked and voted for the lean ordinance and yet by its defeat, thanks to the Register's help, I was personally benefitted to the amount of about $600.

The present administration paid on the bonded indebtedness of the city this year $22,500. The same amount will fall due next year. Now I would like to ask the Register how it expects the present council to pay $55,000 of the bonded indebtedness off in two years, when the Democratic council which it has been defending, was compelled to increase the outstanding orders $17,000 in order to pay $39,000 of the bonded indebtedness in the same period?

But the Register, in to-day's paper makes the following remarkable statement, as an excuse for the last Democratic council: "They (the Republicans) took held of the city government in January, 1895, when they found a shortage in some departments and in the electric

uary, 1895, when they found a shortage

uary, 1895, when they found a shortage in some departments and in the electric light loan, as a result of a long series of years of city administration."

The question that will now present itself to the people is what would the shortage have been now if the former Democratic council had continued in power until the present time?

The Register says that the present council is doing right by paying off the debt of the city as it comes due. Nobody will dispute this, but the present council recognizes that to pay off this debt at the present rate it will either be compelled to recognizes that to pay off this debt at the present rate it will either be compelled to increase the revenue by raising the tax, increase the licenses, or stop almost all needed improvements, or cut down some of the department expenses.

I am sure the present administration will be glad to have the Register point out where this cut can be made. That paper has been howling about the mal-administration of the present council, but has failed so far to point out one item of unnecessary or extravagant expense.

AMUSEMENTS.

The greatest scene in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which will be seen in this city at the Opera House, next Tuesday, November 23rd, is thus described in the New York Evening Sun: That greatest of all scenes in "Tess," where she kills her betrayer, would not be half so telling were it not for the thousand and one little womanly touches that Mrs. Fiske has introduced. Her repose, her poise, her casy, though capable, mastery of the torrible emotions called into play, these are, of course, the vital dominant things, but even they would lose much were they not aided and abetted by the exquisite detail. After that knife's ratite down behind the mirror, Tess seizes her cloak and somehow or other wraps it about her shuddering shoulders. She pulls open the drawer of the dressing table, and gets out a glove which she vainly tries to thrust upon her hand. With the other hand she lifts a hair brush to her head and automatically passes it across her hair. She is doing this when her husband enters the room, and she does not cass doing it while she mechanically utters the words, "Angel, I have killed him." Throughout the entire scene there isn't a scream, a wriggle, a stride, hardly a shade of difference in the pitch of her voice, It is the height of artistic excellence as regards restraint, poise, and, more than all, naturalness, Its inevitableness is wonderful. You don't feel that Tess may have done those things, but that it wasn't possible for her to do anything else. Yet, after all, it isn't so much the things themselves, as it is the way in which they are done. Any actrees could make use of these homely details, but only the highest art could use them with such telling effect. It is, too, no mean triumph for Mrs. Fiske to have made convincing that one part of the story which in its narrative form, falls to convince. The murder and its consequences are the book's weakest point, its only flaw. But on the stage, in New York Evening Sun: That greatest of all scenes in "Tess," where she kills point, its only flaw. But on the stage, in the hands of a consummate artist like Mrs. Fiske, these things assume a pro-per, dominant dramatic value.

THE PLAYERS' CLUB. THE PLAYERS' CLOH,

"Beauty draws us," so wrote Pope, the poet, and he wrote correctly. Beauty is a magnet whether it is in a play or person, and when it is combined both in the play and the people interpreting the same, it is an attraction, indeed. None know this better than Maj. D. E. Stalmaker and The Players' Club, who are to appear at the Opera House on Thanksriving afternoon and evening, in the giving afternoon and evening, in the truly charming play "Young Mrs. Winthrop," which was presented by Mr. A. M. Palmer's company in New York city alone over 500 times, and pronounced by press and public one of the greatest suc-cesses the New York stage has known for

"McSORLEY'S TWINS."

"McSorley's TWINS."

"McSorley's Twins," is written in three acts, and any amount of laughable situations, It is in the author's best vein, and is full of witty lines. This season the dialogue has been brightened up, a new musical programme provided, and the entire performance brought to realize Managers Merritt and Davis' idea of modern comedy. The female division of the company is said to contain several handsome and shapely girls, who are withal, dever singers and dancers, and they present a bewiching picture in their fetchy and expensive costumes. Broad, roaring comedy permeates the entire performance, and at the same time the plot tells a story that sustains the auditor's interest until the end. The best of specialies and high class yaudeville acts form a pleasing diversion, as they are introduced at intervals where they do not interrupt the action of the comedy, or spoil the sense of the dialogue, something that we very ofters witness in farce comedies. "McSorley's Twins," with an excellent company of fun producers, comes to the Grand Opera House the first half of next week.

MAHARA-S MINSTRELS.

MAHARA B MINSTRELS.

Regro melodies lack the southern flavor which is so delightful unless they ver which is so delightful unless they are sung by genuine darkies. Mahara's minstrels are composed of thirty-five genuine colored people. The chief merit of their entertainment, which is being given at the Grand Opera House, lies in their singing and dancing. A fair sized audience was present last night, and applauded generously throughout the evening. The engagement will close with matinee and evening performances to-day.
